

Your new private e-tutor @low costs

10 Nov 2005

A little help is always welcome, specially for students aspiring for better grades in schools. Expensive private tuitions being a deterrent, many are forced to plod through the syllabus, much at disadvantage over classmates paying for extra coaching.

A low-cost option is now available to students seeking specialised tutoring. Made possible by the ubiquitous Internet, e-tutoring or online tutoring is fast becoming a trend. Joining the bandwagon, not surprisingly are technology entrepreneurs wishing to benefit from the first-mover advantage.

Like in software and BPO services, India's advantage is the large pool of talented teachers, who are willing to provide private tuitions to students in English-speaking countries like the US and the UK.

E-tutoring is not uncommon in the US. Reports indicate that close to three million students are expected to study online attracted by the low-cost and flexi-timing features.
