Indians tutor U.S. pupils

AGENCE FRANCE-PRESSE

American students having trouble with pesky math equations or intricate English grammar are increasingly turning to tutors all the way in India for help with their homework.

The tutors are part of a growing army of teachers being recruited across the Asian giant to dispense their knowledge online to American youths.

The price represents a fraction of the $40 to $100 an hour parents typically pay for face-to-face tutoring sessions.

"It's a big anomaly that the United States produces the maximum number of Nobel laureates ... and yet the education system is in crisis at the school level."
